New Orleans Times: There is a scarcity of ocean tonnage at this port, and a renewal of the supply is very much needed to relieve the increasing demands of the grain trade. The elevator is full of grain, and more would so in if there was any room for more would so in if there was any room for it. Besides the accumulation already made, very itemy hipments are affect on the river, and will soon be here, which will further increase the demand for freight room for Liverpool and grain shippers, as freight rates are likely to run high for want of adequate room to take all the cargoes offering. There is a good deal of idle tonnage at nearly all ports that would do well to come at once for employment.

The river fell one foot in the twenty four hours ending at noon to-day with 16 feet of water in the channel.

The Railway Up Vesuvius.

| | Naples Correspondence London News.] At the foot of the cone of Vesuvius there is now to be seen the new station of the railway which ascends to the summit of the old crater, and in future will spare the lover of natural phenomena a wearisome climb. The station is situated on a level spot on the west side of the mountain, about half an an hour's walk from the Observatory. As before, the traveler must reach the Observatory from Resina by carriage or on horseback, but he need no longer dismount or leave his vehicle until he has arrived at the new station, to which the broad road has been continued. The constructors of the railway have adopted the American double iron-rope system. There are two lines of rails, each provided with a car-riage divided into two compartments and capable of holding six persons.
While one carriage goes up the other comes down, thus establishing a counterpoise which considerably economizes the steam of the stationary engine. The incline is extremely steep, commencing at 40 degrees, increasing to 63 degrees and continuing to 50 degrees to the summit. Every possible precaution has been taken against accident, and the railway itself is protected against possible flows of lava by an enormous wall. The ascent The meeting then adjourned until 11 will be made in eight to ten minutes, while before it required from one to two hours. To obtain the necessary supply of water, large covered cisterns have been constructed, which in winter will be filled with the snow that often falls heavily on Vesuvius. This snow will be quickly melted by the internal heat, and, besides the water thus obtained, the frequent rainfall will also be conducted into the cisterns. An elegant cafe-res-taurant capable of accommodating a hundred persons will be attached to the station. Above the entrance to the latter is an ample terrace supported on columns, whence an enchanting columns, whence an enchanting view is obtained not only of the Gulf of Naples, but also of those of Bale and Gaeta, each dotted with islands, while to the north spreads the luxuriant plain of Caserta, bordered by the distant Apennines. Though the iron road may take away some of the poetry and adventure connected with an as cent of the fiery mountain, it must not be imagined that the charm of risk will be imagined that the charm of risk will be entirely lost. On reaching the top there is still the new and smaller cone to be ascended, and no longer ago than last Sunday an acquaintance of mine was there nearly struck down by a large block of glowing lava, which fell at his side with a terrible noise. With a very little extra exertion of his strength the The many friends of Mr. W. M. Park Titan Vesuvius can at once put an end and Eighth streets, this morning. Mr. Davis had been unwell for some time, but the immediate cause of his death was hence the case.
